

The Special Shareholder Meeting Proposal 5 Deserves Shareholder Votes

Autodesk (ADSK) shareholders need an attainable right for 10% of shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting. ADSK currently has what might be called a placebo right to call for a special shareholder meeting.

ADSK requires the backing in of 25% of shares, based on all shares outstanding, to call for a special shareholder meeting. There is now a big rush for companies to adopt the 25% figure because companies are wise and know that the 25% figure is a safe haven and a special meeting will never occur.

More than 100 companies have voted on the special shareholder meeting topic and not even one of these 100 companies have ever cited an example of special shareholder meeting ever occurring at any company that has the 25% figure.

Please vote for an attainable shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting, Proposal 4
